Now is planning time

and here are specific suggestions to help you

Woe and depression are never pleasant things and always create unusual problems and conditions. The present emergency is no different and makes it necessary for individuals and firms alike to think and plan ahead.

Our country is now engaged in an all-out war effort. The Amusement Industry and everyone connected with it are already participating in many government ways and will assume a larger share of the responsibility as time goes on. A big job must be done... now... as quickly as possible... but we'll do it! "We will gain the inevitable triumph!"

While we are striving every faculty and striving to complete this Herculean task in the shortest possible time, let's not forget to prepare for the period that follows. Sound and practical planning now will insure continued existence for amusement enterprises, individual endeavor and business firms.

Advertising becomes of greater importance than ever before. It is a very important link in the chain that will carry you over the tough places. Do not underestimate its power.

There is more to advertising than just offering something for sale. Of far more value today is the ability of advertising to build for the future by developing and preserving confidence and good will.

Manufacturing and selling of some items must be curtailed or stopped entirely to make way for arm and war supplies and equipment, but those with foresight who have confidence in the future of their industry in themselves and realize the importance of maintaining the confidence of their customers also know how valuable advertising can be at a time like this. These companies will keep their names before prospects and customers constantly offering help and suggestions for longer life and better service from merchandise already purchased to make known the fact that they intend to remain in the business and will serve and sell as usual after the present emergency passes.

Continue your business activities as nearly normal as possible; maintain prospect and customer contacts; offer all available aid and service, and remember to advertise regularly, for what you do today will determine your future.

The Amusement Business has had a good headstart for all of us and it will continue to flourish regardless of world affairs because deep down in our hearts we know IT IS ESSENTIAL! When this war has come to an end the Amusement Industry will again go ahead and your faith in the business today will be rewarded with greater success, bigger accomplishments and dividends on your investment.

What People Think

The amusement games industry is free to face with a problem of mass psychology as unusual and as strong as the undercurrents of popular opinion that kept the American people in a negative attitude toward the war until the attack at Pearl Harbor aroused them to their senses.

The purpose of this editorial is to say, as plainly as possible, that now is the time for the industry to keep united, to keep all its organizations functioning strongly and to give a good account of itself as an industry in helping to win the war.

Some very strong factors are favorable to the industry.

Wherever popular opinion is allowed to express itself without undue interference, there is in most cases a very favorable attitude toward the industry. In too many of the elections that have included the question of coin machines, strong local and national names have been the main questions confronting the voters. Newspaper polls and other surveys of popular opinion show that amusement games have many strong supporters and that most people are tolerant in their attitude toward amusement and diversion.

It is the complicated political situations in which public opinion is severely agitated that the industry needs to fear. Such political situations always call for a "got" of some kind.

Amusement machines have made many legal gains in recent years despite the serious aversion that have happened in some places. At least 10 States now recognize by statute the various types of amusement games as an established form of public amusement. No complete check is available of the total number of cities and towns that license amusement games as legitimate forms of amusement, but the number is known to be surprisingly large. An official survey in the State of Washington revealed that 113 cities out of 221 in the State license amusement games for revenue. Using this as a basis, it is safe to say that nearly half the cities and towns in the United States now license amusement machines in some way as a legitimate business.

There are items on the favorable side. Now it is well to speculate on the unfavorable trends with which the industry may be confronted. The nation will remember how reform agencies took liquor to task during the previous World War and how national prohibition became a law

Again the dry forces are trying to make a campaign against liquor, but too many people remember the dry era. The very fact that a new campaign against liquor may not gain much headway means that reformers will be forced to look for some other object of their wrath.

A good example was seen in England soon after the country was involved in war. Reform groups undertook a campaign against betting on the races. But the English people have too long been lovers of the races to give up the national sport. So the reform groups led by Lady Astor, started a national crusade against pinball games. Had not the bombing of London upset the games business as well as the reformers, the crusade against pinball games might have succeeded.

Stronger theories and arguments can be advanced during these times. In 1941 a senator in one State was very much opposed to taverns. He decided that if music boxes could be regulated out of business in the State, then the taverns would lose much of their income. So, to secure revenge on taverns he proposed legislation against music boxes and almost succeeded.

Already it is being argued that the money which people spend in playing amusement games should be spent for Defense Stamps or given to the Red Cross. In order to make people buy stamps and give to the Red Cross they promote legislation against amusement games. It wouldn't ally and yet a lot of people may be taken in by such arguments.

It is being argued that amusement machines should be scrapped and the metal used to make bullets. The argument makes a pretty slogan and many people may be taken in by it. Powerful newspapers and agencies are at work promoting it. They know better, and yet the argument serves certain political purposes.

Mass psychology is a peculiar and a strange thing. There is no way to explain why so many people may be taken in by agitators, by professional reformers and by the many arguments that come and go. But such things do happen.

The war period will usher bring amusement games to great national prestige as serious reforms may break against them. The industry, thousands of small establishments, toy collectors and the playing public are interested in preserving a legitimate amusement.

Reformers often do nothing along with serious effort to make a war victory sign, according to the cartoonist. (The Chicago Daily News)
